IHN Award

The award is presented to a person or organization who/that has made an important scientific or clinical contribution to the advancement of haemovigilance. The award now consists of a certificate and a trophy. It was originally established in 2010 after a generous gift of Prof. Dr. Erhard Seifried. It is presented at the International Haemovigilance Seminar (IHS), at which the awardee delivers a plenary presentation.

IHN Medal

Since 2011 a special medal (showing a lion as the symbol for vigilance) is granted to a person who has made an extraordinary contribution to the work of IHN.

Nominations may be submitted to the IHN Secretary (secretariat@ihn-org.com)

Nominations for the IHN Award should outline how the candidate has made an important contribution to the advancement of haemovigilance, and be accompanied by a current CV and list of publications.
